The following is an accurate description of the work, which I had partly promised to keep quiet, but supposing it would be published elsewhere I subjoin it. You will find it a very interesting description:

"GAMBLE'S ROTARY FLOATING BATTERY. "This model is constructed on a scale of one-eighth of an inch to the foot. It is calculated to carry at least thirty guns of heaviest metal, though at present pierced for only ten. The Battery will be constructed of iron, is to operate. For instance, in some shallow harbors, it is obvious that no large war ship, with heavy armament, can enter; but as these Batteries can carry the heaviest armament even in shallow waters, it is plain that they can destroy with impunity their lighter armed adversaries before the latter can arrive in effective range for their lighter guns. In such cases a great deduction may be made in the weight of the iron employ-SEC. 15. That five per centum on the net amount (after | ed in their construction. By an inspection of the model, it will be seen that it is surrounded by a breastwork, or breakwater, also shot proof, rising but little above the water. This barrier serves at least the three-fold purpose of protection to the hull of the Battery as a provision against boarders from boats, and a preserver of smooth water under the muzzles of the guns. When properly poised, the Battery will present an acute angle to the enemy's fire, causing the shot to pass harmlessly over or under.

"The magazine, in the centre, is furnished with a bomb-proof roof, the apex of which will serve to assist wounded and disabled on board of the private armed vessels space within the battery circle. This floor will not offer resistance to heavy bombs falling upon it, but will permit them to fall through into the water beneath; at the same time it furnishes a parade for the garrison and a

" A yellow flag, say indicating a forty pounder. "A white flug, say indicating a thirty-two pounder. "These flags are so placed that the butt of the staff will rest on the muzzle of its gun, and will thus indicate to the gunner that the gun is loaded, and also its calibre. When its gun is discharged, it will by its recoil permit the flag staff to descend, thus removing it from the vision of the gunner until the piece is again in place and commit. Give us, as far as possible, educated soldiers ready for action, when the flag is again placed, resting on its muzzle, indicating the character of the gun and its exact range. > "The Rotary can be furnished with movable keels or centre-boards, so as to enable her to cross currents, if desired, without making lea-way. When desirable, the heavy guns can be withdrawn, without removal from the Rotary, and lighter guns substituted, making the armament homogenous. In the present model, the heavy guns are mounted in the angles, say three 100pounders and three 80-pounders. Being of the simplest possible construction, the whole can be made by machinery, pressing the iron plates into the required shape most convenient and economical, and forwarded and put together wherever they may be required.
